"perfonal concern."—Sentiments of equal truth and equal ftrength follow; but we forbear to do them injuftice by exhibiting them in terms other than thofe in which they are couched.

The effential principles of our government, as received by the Prefident, are then enumerated. The catalogue is luminous and comprehenfive. The words, in which it is framed, are few and fimple, but the ideas and interefts involved are the moft momentous which relate to man. It develops a political creed in which, all may unite in theory; and in which if all fhall unite in practice, we fhall truly be a free and united people.

So great was the demand for this addrefs and fo confiderable the number of citizens furrounding the office in expectation of its appearing that the Prefs could fcarcely keep pace with it. Already thoufands have read it; and if any eftimate of national opinion can be derived from the uniform fentiment expreffed in Wafhington, it will not be premature to fay, that ere many days are paft, the admiration of a nation will be tributary to this manifeftation of the talents, the firmnefs, and the republicanifm of its firft magiftrate.

Pageant exhibited in Virginia, on the Election of Mr. Jefferson.

A beautiful virgin is feen in plain attire—her countenance benevolent and melancholy—tears are ftreaming from her eyes—label—"Behold Liberty at the point of Death!"

She is furrounded by a group, darting at her looks of the utmoft malevolence.

1ft. Figure of the group—a fool magnificently dreffed with a fceptre in his hand, and a crown on his head—label—"divine right."

2d. Figure—fat and ruddy—a mitre on his head—label—"tythes."

3d. Figure—an armed foldier, with his bayonet at the breaft of Liberty—label—"I will ftab my enemy."

4th. Figure—a ftatefman, holding a bundle of papers, endorfed and placed in the following order—funding—banking—excife—ftamp tax—Britifh treaty army—navy—fedition act—alien act—loaning—bankruptcies—finecures—war—confolation—monarchy—hierarchy—labels—"Energetic government."

5th. Figure—an orator, who addreffes a multitude of fpectators in thefe words—"That woman (pointing to Liberty) is a jacobin—a diforganizer—"a friend to France—an athieft—difregard her tears "—by fuffering the group to deftroy her, "you wifh to obtain wealth—eftablifh "good order—and recommend yourfelves "to God—friends of order—true Ameri-"cans lovers of religion—down with the "anarchift—avenge the deity for her im-"piety—annihilate this only fource of ci-"vil difcord—fhut your eyes—confide in "a king—a bifhop, a foldier, a ftatefman "and an orator, and you will exchange "your abfurd equality of rights, for the "beautiful equality of balances."

The multitude appear irrefolute and amazed—many bufy figures are feen paffing to and fro, foliciting their concurrence with the orator—fome fpeaking in a foreign dialect, and moft of them holding in their hands—commiffions, diplomas, appointments, grants, contracts, warrants or accounts, relating to a multitude of dignities, officers and jobs, civil, military and religious, which had been or would be invented, for raifing and expending public treafure to an incredible amount.

The multitude are almoft infatuated; the danger of liberty is imminent.

At the moment a trumpet is heard, a courier arrives, he proclaims,—"Jefferfon is Prefident."

Inftantly Liberty affumes her wonted intrepidity, fhe exalts her cap, her enemies are difmayed. The king, the bifhop, the foldier and the ftatefman, throw away their badges and their labels. The orator endeavors to withdraw. The bufy figures throw their papers into a mafs and put fire to them. And the multitude with one voice cry out, "We are the votaries of liberty and will deftroy her enemies."

Immediately the enemies of liberty fly to her for protection—fhe appeafes the multitude—exhorts her enemies in the moft foothing terms to be content with equal rights, and is fatisfied with breaking the fceptre, trampling the crown and mitre into duft and afhes, difarming the foldier, tearing the papers of the ftatefman, and looking contemptuoufly upon the orator.

Sixteen beautiful women now appear, each with a badge reprefentative of a ftate, kneeling in a circle with arms locked, and directing the moft fervent adoration towards the guardian angel of America, who is hovering over them, and pointing at UNION, which is feen in the centre of the circle, written in golden and capital letters.

The label of the angel, "Union can only be maintained by preferving liberty."

The following is the Message of Mr. Adams, alluded to in our laft.

Gentlemen of the Senate,

I have confidered the advice and conduct* of the Senate to the ratification of the convention with France, under certain conditions. Although it would have been more conformable to my own judgment and inclination, to have agreed to that inftrument unconditionally, yet in this point, I found I had the misfortune to differ in opinion from fo high a conftitutional authority as the Senate. I judged it more confiftent with the honour and intereft of the United States to ratify it under the conditions prefcribed, than not at all. I accordingly nominated Mr. Bayard, minifter plenipotentiary to the French Republic, that he might proceed without delay to Paris, to negotiate the exchange of ratifications. But as that gentleman has declined his appointment, for reafons equally applicable to every other perfon, fuitable for the fervice, I fhall take no further meafures relative to this bufinefs, and leave the convention with all the documents in the office of ftate, that my fucceffor may proceed with them according to his wifdom.

JOHN ADAMS.
