
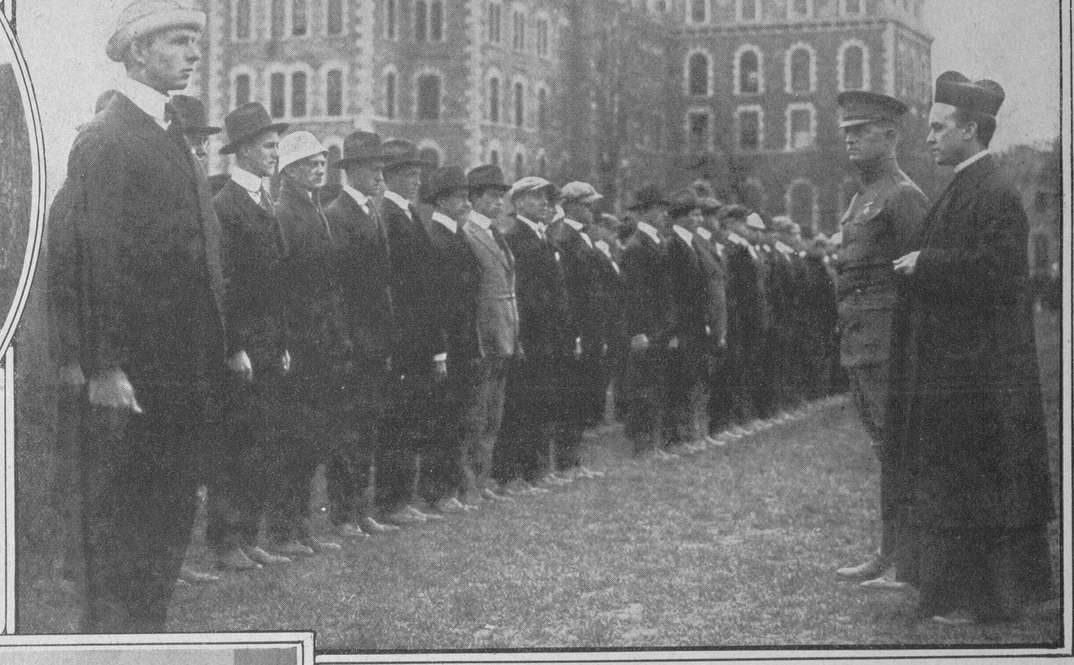
Princeton Students of Aviation Viewing a Flight by an Army Instructor and One of Their Fellow Students About Three Miles from Princeton, Where Marshall Mills, a Princeton Alumnus and Aviator, Established an Aviation School for Princeton Undergraduates Who Seek to Enter the United States Aero Corps, the Government Supplying the Instructors.

MISS NELLIE TURNER,
Member of the Motor Division, National League for Woman's Service, in Her New Uniform.
(Photo by Aime Dupont.)

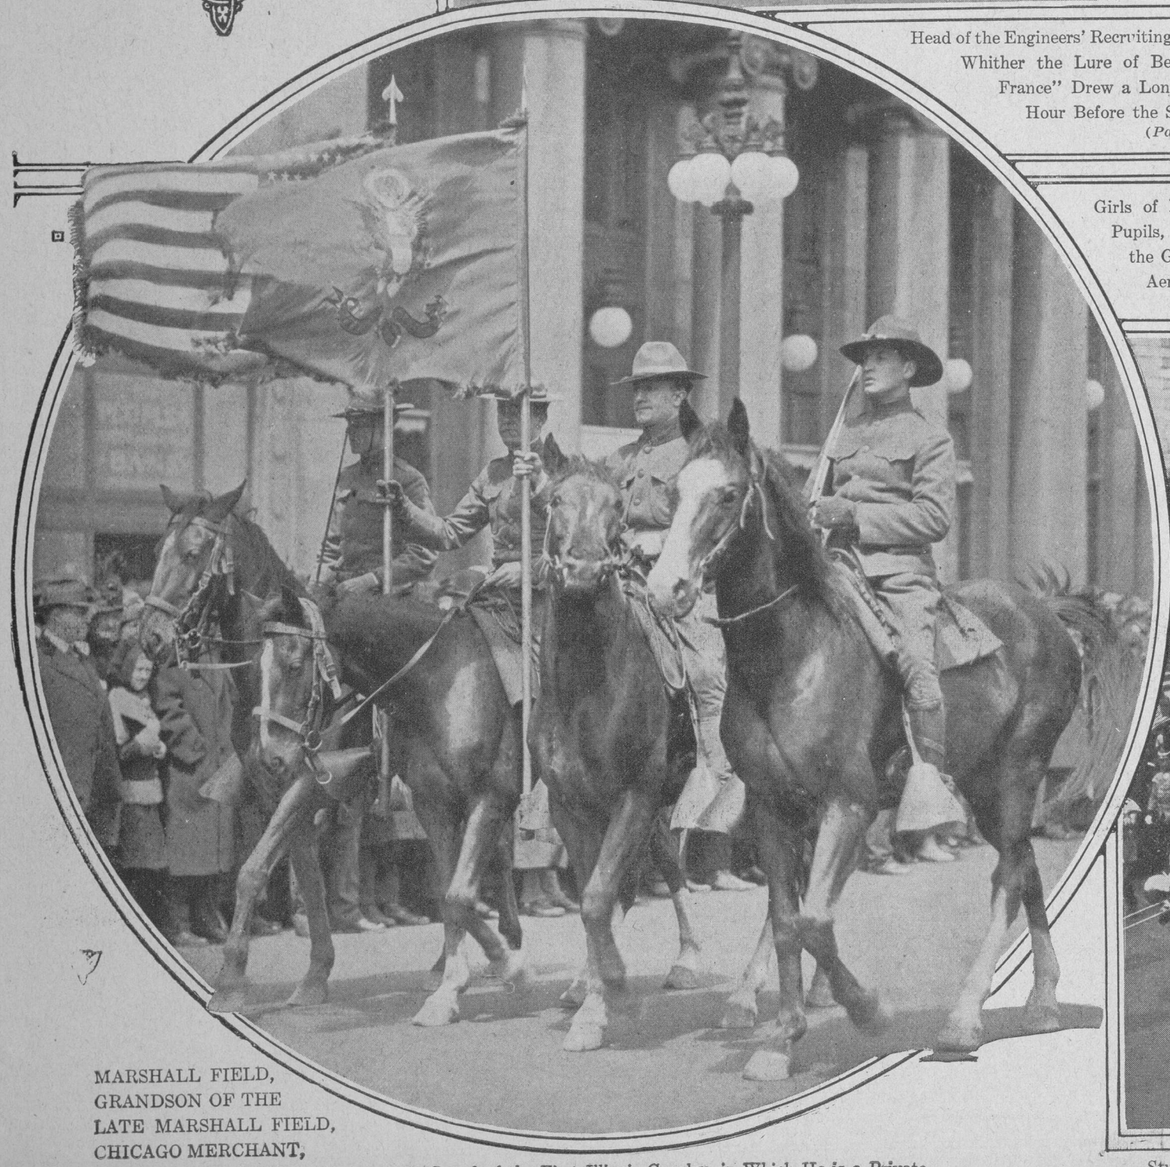
Columbia Student, Invited to Enlist for the Red Cross Service, Giving a Teachers' College Girl the Necessary Bit of Personal History.
(Edwin Levick.)



Capt. George A. Dalcy of the Twelfth Regiment, N. G. N. Y., and the Rev. Father John O'Connor, Prefect of Fordham University, Inspecting One of the Military Companies Composed of Fordham Students, of Whom 800 Are Receiving Military Instruction.
(Photos © by American Press Assn.)

Head of the Engineers' Recruiting Line at 190 Sixth Avenue, Whither the Lure of Being the "First to Go to France" Drew a Long Queue of Applicants an Hour Before the Station Doors Were Opened.
(Paul Thompson.)

Girls of Houston, Texas, Become Aviation Pupils, Expecting to Offer Their Services to the Government as Members of an Auxiliary Aero Corps, Composed Entirely of Women.
(© by Underwood & Underwood.)



MARSHALL FIELD,
GRANDSON OF THE
LATE MARSHALL FIELD,
CHICAGO MERCHANT,
Riding with the Color Guard of the First Illinois Cavalry, in Which He is a Private.
(Photo by Koehne, from Underwood & Underwood.)

Students From the University of California, Here on Their Way to Join the American Ambulance Corps in France, Passing Through the Court of Honor in Front of the Public Library on Fifth Avenue, Preceded by a National Guard "Tank."
(© American Press Assn.)