Mount McKinley by Lawrence

MOUNT M'KINLEY, the giant sentinel of the Pacific Coast and the highest peak in North America, lifts its eternal snows 20,300 feet above the sea in rugged Alaska. Its magnificent pregnable, offer tremendous obstables to the mountain climber; and many unsuccessful attempts were made before the great mountain was finally conquered. Perhaps the most famous effort and fail- 1912 Professor Hershel Parker, of Columbia University, almost attained the goal, but was driven back by lack of provisions when within 300 feet of the top. The following year the Rev. Hudson Stuck, archdeacon of the Yukon, succeeded in
