

The Bear That Walks Like a Man Again Finds His Feet.

Austria Rushes Reinforcements to the Stripa Line—One of the horse railways on which troops and munitions are being transported to stop the new Russian offensive. Photo by Paul Thompson.

Serving Wine in the French Trenches—The first line trench fighters get four cups a day, the second line three cups a day and the third and fourth lines two cups, mixed with water. Photo by Trowbridge.

Emery Marshall, the Only American Serving in the Regular French Army—Before joining the army he worked in a New York City bank. He is here shown on sentinel duty in a first line trench. Photo by William P. Jay.

The Price of Russia's New Offensive—Wounded soldiers on the way to Petrograd hospitals.

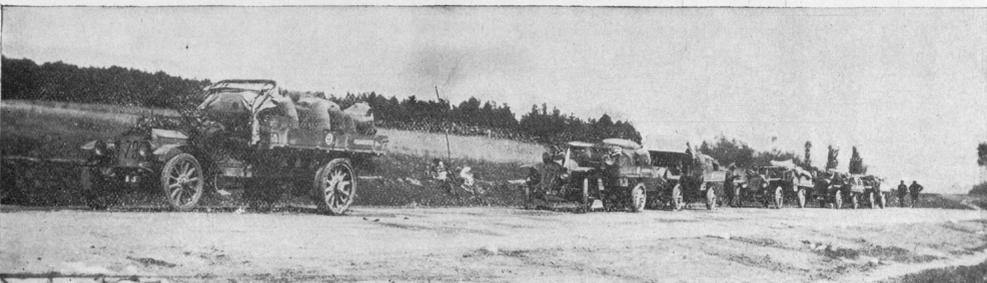

La Belle France Greets the Russ—French girls welcoming their allies at their camp at Mirabeau. Exclusive photo-graph from the French Ministry of War.

The Russian Bear Wakes from His Winter Sleep—Troops on the way to the Stripa line. In a week's offensive the Russians have taken more than 50,000 Austrian prisoners. Medem Photo Service.

The Allies Prepare for an Attack on Salonica—British soldiers disguising a gun position with a mound of earth. Bulgarian troops have already invaded Greece. Photo from Janet M. Cummings.

Ammunition for the New Russian Offensive on the East Front—Motor trucks made in the United States are rushing shells to the Galician and Bukovina fronts. Medem Photo Service.

Windmill a War Observation Post—A Belgian officer watching for movements of the enemy in Flanders. Medem Photo Service.