

The trolley ferry is a modern adaptation of an ancient practice. This aerial transport runs across the Gila River at Silver City, N. M. It carries anything that can be loaded, from a revolver to a New Year's Eve party. Underwood & Underwood.

Looks like a wet night on the Hackensack meadows. As a matter of fact, it's an actual scene in Greece's Salonica, where a barrel is worth rescuing. Salonica is like West Street, New York, in flood time, and it's flood time in Salonica. The trolley car is a real pay-as-you-enter. In the offing are the French and English ships which are taking the Allied troops to Greece. Underwood & Underwood.

New York's Staten Island commuters lead an adventurous life. The photograph shows what an ocean liner did to the ferryboat Manhattan, of the Municipal Staten Island Line, in a collision on the way to the Battery. Some battery! Those who were sitting in the seats built on the collision side had a close shave free of charge. Greely Photo Service.

East Side, West Side, North Side, South Side—all around the town—the shopping tide at the full in holiday time in Fifth Avenue. Photo by Curtis.

More than twenty years ago an inventor built a submarine boat. Wags named it "The Foolkiller." It was launched in the Chicago River, made one dive and rested on the river bed until a few days ago, when it was raised. As revealed by the photograph, it resembles a Tampa Christmas cigar. Underwood & Underwood.

Mrs. Ava Willing Astor as she appeared returning to New York on the Rotterdam. Underwood & Underwood.