An important part of the equipment of the Government Aviation School at Mineola, L. I., is a 500,000,000-candle-power searchlight and eleven smaller flood lights. The flood lights are kept in operation all night, for the benefit of the night flyers.

This monoplane, constructed by Private O. Young for the benefit of the rookie aviators, probably has been dissected and put together again more times than any rookie would care to bother counting. The students are taught how to construct minor parts of the machines.

The instructor, in the rear of the airplane, gives his lesson, not by shouting directions into the ear of the student pilot, but by means of an instrument called an instructor-graph, manipulated by a switchboard. When taking photographs from an airplane, it is part of the pilot's duty to operate the camera, fastened to the bottom of the machine.
