

Suit from James A. Hearn & Son.
We hope she will never have any real use for this cartridge belt, but it is here as the distinguishing feature of this khaki suit. And there are the regulation army buttons, just like those on the soldier boy's uniform, and pockets enough to delight the most militant of minute-girls.

Costumes from Franklin Simon & Co.
Every girls' camp this summer is going to take on the air of a military outpost. You see it reflected here in the costume of the sentry, wearing her khaki skirt as a cape, and in the epaulettes on the khaki coat-dress at the left. The dress at the right is just the common garden khaki one-piece, comfort-giving costume that every girl loves, because she can cook, hike and play her part in all the camp sports without a thought of clothes.

MOBILIZING THE MINUTE-GIRLS

Photographs
by the Lejaren
&
Hiller Studio.

Suit from Frenau-Sweeney.
How can you resist her—this minute-girl in khaki who is eager to do her bit for Uncle Sam? And Dame Fashion has seen to it that she shall present her appeal in a jaunty trench coat, buttoned close to the throat to defy the weather in its ugliest moods.

Costume from Abercrombie & Fitch.
She's off duty and about to make a social call, for so comfortable and practical are the khaki costumes that the girls and women are adopting them for every day and all day wear. This is one of the three-piece costumes with breeches.

Photo by Paul Thompson.

Costume from Abercrombie & Fitch.
Here we have the infantry uniform of the minute-girl army—khaki coat-dress, regulation felt hat and puttees; and the cavalry—khaki riding coat, breeches, Russia leather boots, and soft felt hat.

Suit from Frenau-Sweeney.
She is not in regulation army form, even a girl scout would know that, but she is wearing with great pride the regulation khaki uniform of the minute-girls, even to felt hat and puttees.

