

Somewhere just back of the fighting lines in France thousands of our khaki-clad soldier lads are taking a well-earned rest after a gruelling all-day hike. Steel shrapnel-proof helmets, now a regular part of the U. S. soldier's equipment, are very much in evidence.

French Official from Pict. Press.

From right to left—Commander in chief of the French armies, General Pétain; General "Go-get-'em" Pershing, in command of our forces overseas; President Poincaré of France and M. Painlevé, France's Premier—snapped as they adjourned from a war conference.

French Official from Pict. Press.

The old reliable American Army mule—in France—efficiently drags a transport wagon up a hillside road that overlooks one of our great army training camps in the valley below.

French Official from Pict. Press.