An interesting self-portrait by Della Shull, now being exhibited with other portraits and figure paintings by this young American artist at the Milch Galleries.

Grottoes like this have been made habitable by refugees from the Aisne region near the firing line. Housekeeping is here reduced to the simplest possible terms—the absence of furniture making necessary the return to many primitive customs.

Pictorial Press.

Jet Stanley, one of the pretty litttle Jack o' Lanterns in Fred Stone's tunefully pleasing musical entertainment of that name at the Globe.

Georgie Tyfe, passing under an arch of swords formed by French officers in her honor immediately after she had been decorated with the War Cross. In the recent battle of Flanders she won recognition for bravery under fire, rescuing many wounded.

International Film.

Ellen Markhus, a clever exhibition skater at the new Crystal Carnival Ice Rink, recently opened at Broadway and 95th Street.

Vera Michelena, the prima donna of John Cort's newest musical comedy success, "Flo Flo," at the Cort.
