Gay Days Behind the Lines

Another way of going over the top. Almost as exciting, and no need of a barrage.
© Underwood & Underwood.

South African heroes demonstrating that there is a whole lot of joy left in life despite the efforts of the Boche. © Central News Service

These British officers, winning the three-legged race, are both chaplains. You can't beat the clergyman in khaki!
© Central News Service.

No one wants to get a ducking if he can help it. But it's not always a cinch to stay on the pole.
—British Official, © Kadel & Herbert.

After "bully beef" and "hard tack," French bread, we're told, is a welcome change.
© Kadel & Herbert.

A game of this sort never fails to challenge one's interest. However, in this particular instance, there is an added thrill. The ground under the feet of the players was captured from the Huns only a few hours previous. The German artillery was so busy beating it, at the time the photo was taken, that there were no shell fire interruptions.
© Underwood & Underwood

© Central News Service.

Each team straddles a plank and then does stunts.

A fish is a fish, for that. Tommy's expression is one of undisguised admiration. So we must agree to make the most of the treasure at the bottom of the net.
—British Official, from Feature Photo Service.