

When Johnny Militiaman Goes Marching to the Border.

The 12th Regiment of New York City marching to the 23d St. Ferry on the way to Hoboken where it entrained on June 28 for the U. S.-Mexico border. There it joined the 7th, 71st and other units of the New York National Guard, mustered into the Federal service.
Greeley, Photo Service.

Three of the girls the 71st left behind them. Left to right—Isabel and Gertrude Clancy daughters of First Sergeant Clancy, Co. C., and Helen McGoo, daughter of Private James McGoo.
Underwood & Underwood.

Sam Harris of Troop C, Tenth Cavalry, after the wounds he received at Carizal had been dressed at El Paso.
Underwood & Underwood.

El Paso Welcomes the Tenth Cavalry Troopers Released by the Mexicans. After the negroes made prisoners at Carizal had been surrendered to General Bell they exchanged their rags for jackets and overalls and held an impromptu reception. In their centre is Lem Spillsbury, the Mormon scout.
Underwood & Underwood.

The Auto Square of the Regulars in Mexico—When a halt is called for mess the motor trucks which Gen. Pershing is now using for scouting are formed in a hollow square to guard against attack.
Underwood & Underwood.

Co. A, 5th Cavalry, U. S. A., at chow in Chihuahua. The men of New York's 7th, 71st and 12th Regiments are now in similar surroundings along the U.S.-Mexican border.
International Film Service.

Men of the First New Jersey National Guard Regiment getting a bath on the way to Douglas, Ariz. They detained during a delay, stripped and plunged into the Wabash.
Central News Photo Service.

