

the baby's bottle where the problem is to keep it cool

On the sands at Coney. While mother watches, father and the children get their rest.

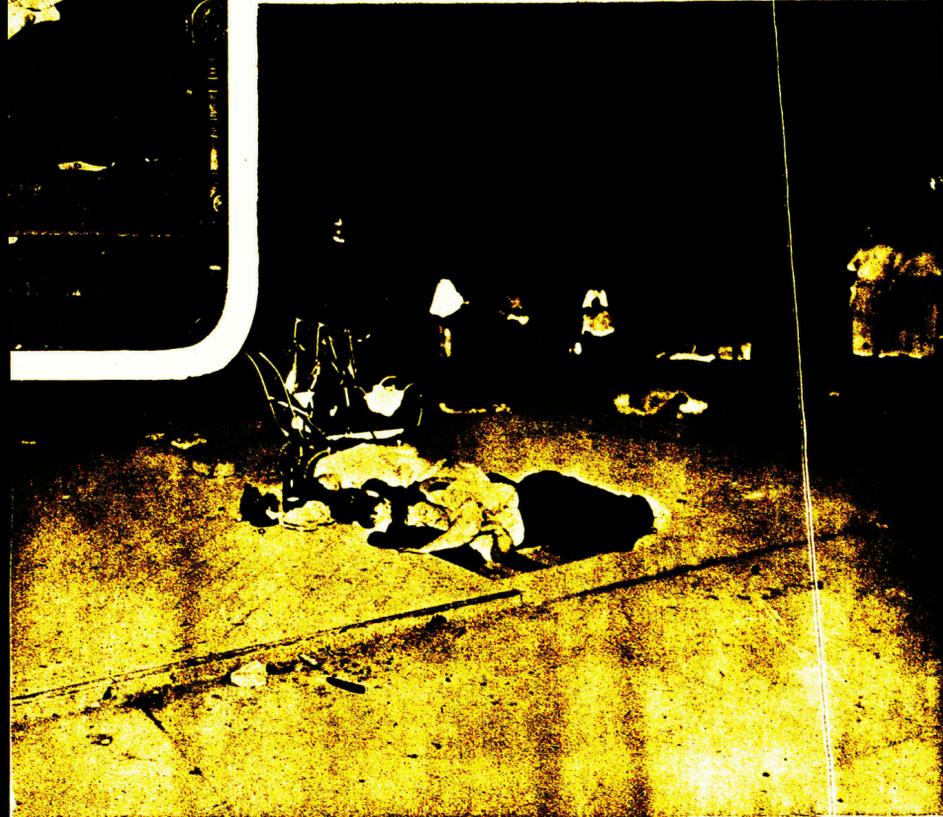

A pillow for two on a roof. In the tenement house district.

Central Park has its nights, too, but is a bit more exclusive in its acceptance of guests.

Under Williamsburg Bridge. A family suite. The bath is at the foot of the street.

One may sleep in Riverside Park if one has carfare. There are real trees there, and river breezes.