AMONG US MORTALS

THE BOARDING HOUSE CROWD

Drawn by W. E. HILL.

The elderly bachelor, who suspects all unmarried women of matrimonial designs, inhales his breakfast coffee, much to the disapproval of Miss Blish, the domestic science teacher.

Anna, the slavey, letting the dust collect and listening to the people in the second floor back quarreling about clothes.

Young man who wants to take a bath waiting half an hour while somebody's little boy tries out a pair of water wings in the tub.

The landlady, about to spring the "better days" gag.

The couple who have boarded around for twenty years, and show the effects.

The actress, home from a season in Baltimore, getting little Frou Frou his dinner.

Mrs. Middle West, whose daughter is cultivating a voice, tells the dentist that Christobel has a much bigger range than Geraldine Farrar had at her age, and can sing louder.

The girl who reads proof for "Dotty Stories" wishing the house might burn down. Anything to vary the monotony of Sunday afternoon in a hall bedroom.
