

Made Into a Play, Alice Duer Miller's Book, "Come Out of the Kitchen," Loses None of Its Charm at the Hands of Ruth Chatterton

Ruth Chatterton, winsome as ever, comes back to Broadway as Olivia Daingerfield.

Randolph Weeks (Walter Connolly) steals a kiss from Jane-Ellen over the ice cream freezer.

"Sure," says Jane-Ellen, "tis myself could take the sole off your Honor's shoe and cook it so as it would melt in your Honor's mouth"

Jane-Ellen plays an impolite trick on Solon Tucker to pay him for his unwelcome advances.

The Daingerfield children act as servants to please the tenant of their once prosperous home. Charlie is lectured for breaking a plate.

Her interested employer, Burton Crane, helps Jane-Ellen clear the table after dinner. First thing you know he's in love.

Bruce McRae, who makes love to Olivia just as she ought to be made love to.
