

It's cold here—but the children are not. Sleeping bags, woolen caps, gloves and stockings, and a large quantity of fresh air, keep the body temperature high.

A few minutes' nap, morning and afternoon, on what appear to be cushionless and springless, but comfortable cots, is part of the daily schedule.

Fresh Air Is a Part of the Curriculum in This Public School, No 135, at First Avenue and Fifty-First Street

This boy has had two years of the open air treatment. It is possible to keep a child as long a time as this because there are five grades in the class.

A seventh inning stretch. They come to the balcony by way of diversion for a few arm and breathing exercises. The children are healthy, though there are tuberculous strains in their families.

Fresh air inside, but sunshine, too, outside. A grammar lesson mixed with a little of that sunshine is the more endurable.

Wrappings discarded, the children have vigorous exercise drills every day. This movement is to strengthen back and arms.

Mid-morning refreshment, consisting of crackers and milk. There will be mid-afternoon refreshment, too.
